Enumeration 1999

Introduction

General enumerations are required by section 42 of the Election Act in the third calendar year after a general election. An enumeration may be by a door-to-door visitation or by another method authorized by the Chief Electoral Officer. The 1999 enumeration was conducted as a phased series of mailings because door-to-door enumerations are not as efficient as they once were.

Access to voters' residences has become increasingly problematic. Changing lifestyles, large numbers of voters away from their homes for work-related reasons, and individual concerns for privacy and safety have made it less likely that enumerators will find someone at home.

In many areas it is difficult to recruit sufficient or reliable enumerators willing to learn complex procedures for two weeks' work. Many are reluctant to enumerate door-to-door out of fear for their personal safety. In rural and remote areas, enumerators have frequently commented that their compensation was inadequate for the cost of travel and the amount of time required to visit widely separated residences.

The quality of work provided by enumerators had also become an increasing problem. In the compressed period required for a door-to-door enumeration, it is very difficult to ensure quality control measures are followed with respect to completeness and accuracy. Computerization has demanded that data input standards be maintained, however poor quality source documents cause significant internal data integrity problems.

Following every door-to-door enumeration this office has heard concerns that certain areas in major urban centres are left unenumerated, that certain categories of voters are not adequately registered - the homeless, the hearing impaired, new Canadians, and voters whose occupations require frequent absence from their residences - and that the enumeration process is simply "not working" as it should or as it did in the past.

Finally, an enumeration is a very costly undertaking. From previous enumeration results, at least 60% of those contacted would simply be confirmed as still residing at the same address, which leaves only an anticipated 800,000 actual updates and new registrations. The cost of performing a door-to-door enumeration in the Spring of 1999 was projected to be $14 million, or $17.50 for each update to the Voters List.

For these reasons it was determined that a postal enumeration was the most cost efficient method of canvassing the British Columbia electorate.

Preparation

As stated in my 1998 Annual Report, with one in four people moving every year, an accumulation of inactive voter records can result from unreported residential moves. To begin the preparations for this enumeration, a program was undertaken in 1998 to purge the Voters List of inactive voter records so that we did not attempt to contact voters at addresses at which we were confident they were no longer resident.

A mail campaign was conducted to target approximately 240,000 voters whose records indicated they had not voted in the last two elections and that no address change or confirmation activity had taken place since the 1996 general election. Approximately 37,000 of these voters confirmed their voter records; in July, the remaining 200,000-plus records were purged from the Voters List pursuant to section 46 of the Election Act.

By comparing information in our Voters List data base with residential address information from Elections Canada we identified approximately 192,000 residential addresses where there were no voters registered. A pre-enumeration mailing to those addresses was supported by a print and broadcast advertising campaign at the end of March 1999, inviting all voters to call our toll-free line to update or confirm their voter registration data. Approximately 42,000 updates to the provincial Voters List, including 24,000 new voters, were generated as a result of this mailing.

The enumeration phase commenced on the first Monday in May 1999, by sending enumeration packages to the 1.5 million registered voters who had not confirmed or updated their registration data since April 1998. The enumeration packages asked each voter to confirm or update their voter registration information. Packages were sent in eight regional mailings between May and the end of June.

Voters whose information was up-to-date could confirm their voter registration simply by signing and returning a confirmation card in the postage-paid envelope provided. Voters needing to update their name or address information could do so by returning a completed registration card, and unregistered voters could use the registration card provided to have their name added to the Voters List. A toll-free telephone service with extended hours was available and voters could confirm or update their address information by calling the toll-free number. Registration inquiries and updates were also generated through the Elections BC Website (www.elections.bc.ca) and by email from voters. Almost one million voters have registered, confirmed or updated their voter registration since the mailing of the enumeration packages in May 1999.

Conclusion

In October 1999 Elections BC mailed 1.3 million voter registration confirmation cards to those voters who had responded to their enumeration package or had otherwise registered, confirmed or updated their registration information since April 1998. In subsequent mailings to date, voter registration confirmation cards have been issued to an additional 550,000 registered voters. Cards were not sent to voters whose records had not been updated in the last 18 months. A second mailing of registration confirmation cards will take place early in 2000.

The overall cost of the 1999 enumeration was $4 million. This is a dramatic reduction from the anticipated costs if a door-to-door enumeration had been conducted. The cost per voter record update was $4.00, compared to a projected cost of $17.50 per update for a door-to-door campaign.

Voter Record Transactions

The transaction activity in the provincial Voters List data base cannot be directly translated into the final number of registered voters. For example, a change of name is recorded as an 'Add' (the new name) and a 'Delete' (the former name) to the data base, but this activity does not add a new voter to the Voters List.

The transaction figures shown include: "Adds", which are the number of new voters entered into the Voters List system; "Deletes", which are the number of voter records which were removed from the system; and "Changes", which reflect transactions for voters who have changed addresses within an electoral district and for voters changing addresses between electoral districts (to eliminate double counting, for a move from one district to another, the computer system records a change for the district into which the voter has moved).
